SUN VALLEY TEACHER SELECTED TO PARTICIPATE IN CDC SUMMER PROGRAM

ASTON, PA: Sun Valley High School science teacher Kathleen Emhof was one of 16 participants from across the United States selected to be a part of the Science Ambassador Program for the Center for Disease Control (CDC) this July in Atlanta, Georgia. Ms. Emhof will be assisting the CDC in writing a lesson plan on a specific public health issue affecting young adults, in a real world manner.

The Science Ambassador Program Workshop is a 5-day professional development workshop at CDC for middle and high school science educators to collaborate with CDC subject matter experts on developing public health-based lesson plans. Lesson plans developed during the workshop not only meet National Science Education Standards, but also challenge students to think about science in new ways.
